The Minor in Health & Culture includes courses that examine the human condition from both biological and cultural perspectives. These courses will collectively facilitate an understanding of the evolutionary and biological underpinnings of health, cultural beliefs about disease and the body, and the social, political, and economic roots of health disparities. The Minor in Health & Culture helps prepare students to pursue careers related to human health, including social work, public health, nursing, medical insurance consulting, dentistry, physiotherapy, orthopedics, or medical or veterinary schools. This specialized Minor consists of six courses totaling 18 credits and can be easily combined with Majors in other departments. If combined with a Major in Anthropology, only 9 credits are required, and these must be different courses than those counting towards the Major.

Students must declare their intention to minor in Health & Culture by submitting a Major/Minor declaration form, meeting with a faculty advisor, and completing a concentration form in consultation with their advisor. The courses (and semesters they will be taken) that the student intends to take to comprise the Minor should be entered below. This form should be prepared and signed by the advisor in duplicate – one copy retained by the student, the other filed with the department. Changes in the courses selected may be made at any time as long as the basic requirements are completed. Unauthorized changes, however, may result in a departmental decision not to award the Minor.

Grades below C- in anthropology courses are not acceptable for the Major or Minor. Students who have received such grades in any course needed to fulfill the Minor requirements must retake those courses and achieve a grade of C- or better to be considered for graduation as Health & Culture Minors.
